REPORT.

Classmates: — In presenting to you the third report of the class I have very little to say in the preface. I should not be thought a Class Secretary did I not embrace the opportunity to chide those who have not answered the circulars which were issued for the preparation of the report, and to thank those who have kindly assisted me to the extent of their ability, — though in many cases they did so only after the most persistent dunning.

I intended my fifth question should be rather farcical, thinking it an impertinent one, although it might gratify us all to know how many of the members were on their pilgrimage to the shrine of Hymen. Judge, then, of my surprise at finding that a large majority assumed the question to be serious, and of receiving quite a number of long dissertations from those who could not simply say "Yes." I was pleased with the desire, of which these were an indication, to render the Secretary all possible assistance; but I was almost tempted to say that I would never again essay a joke without, after the manner of Artemus Ward, calling attention to the fact that a joke was intended. From the many very interesting answers I have selected one that I have thought worthy of publication, and it reads as follows: —

Dear Barnes, — That fifth question is one calculated to inspire thoughtfulness. I think I detect in it a little of the arrogance of the father of two boys It strikes boldly through the flimsy delicacies of conventionality. It would be easy enough for an engaged man to answer it, but I can't conceive of one unattached presuming to say whether he was likely to be. You fairly corner such delinquents. If one says, Yes! and nothing further is heard from him, his situation is certainly embarrassing. I don't know whether any one would be justified in saying, No! even if he lived alone on a desert island, for it is always the unexpected that happens, and the very assertion would mark him out to be pulled down from his proud pedestal of self-sufficiency. But if one should have the courage to say, No! he immediately lays himself open to that invidious second part of the question, "Why not?" Why not, indeed? A man would have to give the history of his life from the cradle to satisfy you. One could hardly humiliate himself to say, "Because I fail to please;" and it would be the height of conceit to answer, "Because I am hard to please." One might make a sort of compromise and say, "Because those who please me are hard to please;" but even that would not be balm to the sensitive spirit of the shrinking bachelor, and the extremely valid excuse, "Because I can't afford it," can only be rendered with calmness when one can afford it. So, I think, the answers to the fifth question will be like some of the war news that we used to have, interesting if true.

The class dinner this year is given free of expense, and so far as possible I have extended invitations to those who have at any time been connected with the class. This course, both as to making the dinner free to all the class, and also as to extending invitations to those who were but temporarily members of it, I should like to continue as far as possible in future years, and to this end I request you to send me the address of any former members you may know, and must, at the same time, urge a more prompt liquidation of class subscriptions. In the present case, to meet the expense of this year's dinner, I have been compelled to draw on the class fund, though only for an amount which can be replaced when the next interest on its securities falls due. The accompanying slip will show you the condition of our finances, and I hope all those who have not contributed to the fund will see the necessity of doing so promptly. If you will all make it a point to keep me informed of any changes in your addresses and your movements in general, you will make the Secretary's duties less laborious and his reports more authentic and interesting.

Yours very truly,

ALBERT M. BARNES.

Secretary.
